

Contents

- 5 Board-level employee representation: balancing interests across the company
Introduction
Norbert Kluge and Michael Gold
- 13 Board-level employee representation in Austria
14 Leopold Abraham (oil industry) – ‘We want our fair share’
- 23 Board-level employee representation in the Czech Republic
24 Jan Klimes (oil industry) – ‘The other side knows what we know about the company’
- 33 Board-level employee representation in Finland
34 Ari Rajamäki (shipping industry) – ‘You can get a lot of information that our shop stewards need’
- 47 Board-level employee representation in France
48 Marie-Paule Delpierre (defence industry, CFDT) – ‘We’re able to go and see the CEO. We just have to ring up and ask to meet’
56 Jean-Michel Gaveau (telecommunications, CGT) – ‘The role of board-level employee representatives is greatly underestimated’
- 69 Board-level employee representation in Germany
70 Detlef Dirks (transport engineering) – ‘The company can rely on us, and would do itself serious damage if it were to call this trust into question’
79 Sandra Hofstetter (consumer research services) – ‘You get a completely different perspective on your company’
90 Robert Oswald (chemical industry) – ‘A knowledge-driven company needs a corporate culture which promotes employee participation’
99 Dietrich Schallehn (technical inspection services) – ‘The German form of codetermination would be well worth extending’
- 107 Board-level employee representation in Hungary
108 László Kanizslai (food industry) – ‘My father and mother told me that I should help others, that’s my mission maybe’
- 117 Board-level employee representation in Ireland
118 Pat Compton (postal services) – ‘I have brought a balance to the board which would be fair to all the stakeholders, and particularly to the staff’
128 Cormac MacDonnchadha (electricity supply) – ‘Environmental aspects are hugely important for us in our role’
- 137 Board-level employee representation in Luxembourg
138 John Castegnaro (steel industry) – ‘I represent all the employees, but never forget that I’m on the board as a trade union representative’

147 Board-level employee representation in the Netherlands

149 Ieke van den Burg (high tech services) – 'It's really good to have a stakeholder oriented approach and diverse backgrounds of people to make a good strategy happen'

163 Board-level employee representation in Norway

165 Steinar Nickelsen (financial services) – 'The role is educative, challenging and very exciting'

173 Board-level employee representation in Poland

175 Krzysztof Jasek (brewing industry) – 'I have a dream that EU legislation would require employee representation in the boardroom of every company'

189 Board-level employee representation in Sweden

191 Torbjörn Olsson (electrical engineering) – 'I have a wider perspective on the Swedish business... and I also feel more respected by certain people around me'

199 Martina Ravn (gambling services) – 'I just want this company to be a good, healthy and fair company'

209 Appendices:209 Further reading*214 Worker board-level participation in the EU-27*222 The European Worker Participation Competence Centre (EWPPC) of the European Trade Union Institute