Governments allocate aid for self-employed workers
April 29, 2020
A growing number of governments are stepping up their assistance to self-employed workers by providing unemployment benefits to minimise the economic impact of the coronavirus pandemic. In order to salvage their coronavirus-hit economy, countries like the UK and France are offering unemployment benefits for gig workers affected by the pandemic. Gig workers, including freelancers, independent contractors, and temporary or part-time hires, are part of the labour market that now makes up a third of the global workforce, according to estimates from the International Labour Organization.

Consequences of COVID-19 on labour markets
April 29, 2020
The International Labour Organization (ILO) has monitored the impact of the coronavirus outbreak on the world's labour markets over the past weeks. In the report, the labour organisation stresses the need to uphold labour rights and strengthen health protection but also the need for fiscal and monetary responses to support the most affected sectors and vulnerable people, including financial assistance for enterprises.

SURE: €100 billion to keep people in jobs
April 22, 2020

The EU will provide additional financial support to Member States to protect jobs and workers affected by the coronavirus pandemic. Many businesses are experiencing economic difficulties as a result of the COVID-19 crisis and have had to temporarily suspend or substantially reduce their activities and the working hours of their staff. To support employers and to protect workers and the self-employed from losing their jobs or incomes, the European Commission proposed a new temporary instrument called SURE (Support to mitigate Unemployment Risks in an Emergency), to complement national efforts to protect employment. It is expected to be operational by 1 June 2020.

Help for over 40 million new unemployed
April 22, 2020

The ETUC is urging EU leaders to agree and implement, without delay or conditions, proposals to help workers, companies and public services hit by the coronavirus crisis. With over 40 million workers now temporarily or permanently in unemployment since the crisis began, there can be no repeat of the days-long wrangling between Member States' finance ministers witnessed at the Eurogroup meeting earlier this month.

A quarter of Europe's jobs at risk
April 20, 2020

According to an analysis from McKinsey, more than a quarter of all jobs in Europe could be impacted by the economic fallout of the coronavirus pandemic. The consultancy estimated that up to 59 million jobs are at risk of things like reduced working hours, temporary furloughs or permanent job losses. Unemployment could almost double in the coming months, with staff most affected in areas like customer service and sales, food services and building occupations.

Mitigating layoffs through short-time work
April 7, 2020
To mitigate the rising number of unemployed persons due to the COVID-19 crisis, the social partners have developed a new model of subsidised short-time work that could become an international role model. The Austrian model allows a temporary reduction in working hours of up to 90% while maintaining the employment relationship and granting almost full public wage compensation. This measure can help to bridge the economic fallout as it helps to stabilise demand and fosters a fast return to pre-crisis economic activity.

Employment sustainability programme
April 6, 2020

The Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs launched a targeted antivirus employment sustainability programme. The aim is to mitigate the negative impact of anti-crisis, quarantine and other emergency measures taken in connection with the spread of COVID-19. One way that this objective is to be achieved is by reducing the salary costs of employers, in the form of a contribution from the state to the total labour costs. In other words, employees' salaries will be partially reimbursed if they have experienced obstacles to working due to the coronavirus.

Flexicurity model is dumped
April 9, 2020

Under Denmark's flexicurity model, employers have been given free rein to hire and fire workers, in order to help businesses adapt to the ups, downs and shifts in markets. But the coronavirus crisis is not about adapting to market changes. Denmark, like many other countries, ordered many businesses to shut down to stem the spread of COVID-19. To encourage firms to not let go of their employees, the government is compensating them for 75% of wages of up to €4,000 per month. For those on temporary hourly contracts, the state will pay 90%.

220% pay rise
April 15, 2020

Dozens of medical workers are earning more than double their salary during the coronavirus pandemic, thanks to an existing emergency agreement between the country’s medical unions and employers. The pay rise comes under a ‘crisis situation’ agreement that currently applies to around 100 unionised doctors, nurses, and nursing assistants working in intensive care units in Stockholm, according to the Swedish Medical Association (SMA). The deal also offers a 120% ‘crisis compensation’ on top of their existing pay, yielding a 220% pay rise.

Higher compensation for wages
April 14, 2020

The government will increase the amount it pays to companies to cover salaries of employees who have been put on reduced hours, as it fights to lessen the effects of the COVID-19 outbreak on the economy. The government said it would temporarily cover up to 86% of wage and labour tax costs for workers who were partially laid off.

Aid for short-time work
April 7, 2020
The government launched the largest ever aid package to counter the economic impact of the coronavirus epidemic and to avoid a massive wave of joblessness. Companies employing 1.45 million workers — or nearly 29% of the entire workforce — have applied so far for short-time work compensation. Under the ‘Kurzarbeit’ scheme, employees get 80% of their wages from the government.
