Opinion on EU minimum wages
September 22, 2020

The European Economic and Social Committee (EESC) has adopted an opinion following the European Parliament’s request for an exploratory opinion on minimum wages. The request was made after the Commission announced that it was considering proposing a legal instrument to ensure that every EU worker is entitled to a minimum wage allowing a decent standard of living. The EESC recognises concerns regarding possible EU action in this area and does not underestimate the complexities of the issues involved. It therefore stresses that any such EU initiative must be shaped on the basis of an accurate analysis of the situation in the Member States, and must fully respect the social partners’ role and autonomy, as well as the different industrial relations models.

Employment and social developments
September 15, 2020
The European Commission’s ‘Employment and Social Developments in Europe’ report highlights the following aspects: Adequate minimum wages and minimum incomes can have a beneficial effect on the social mobility of Europeans. Strengthening social fairness, including through investments in people, pays off. Closing gender-related gaps brings particularly high returns, while extending working lives, and raising educational attainment also have positive effects. Short-time work schemes are protecting jobs effectively.

Collective agreement for the metal technology industry
September 25, 2020

Despite the wish of the Association of the Metal Technology Industry (FMTI) to postpone the talks, the negotiations about a new agreement in the metal industry started on September 24, 2020. After one round of negotiations, social partners struck a collective agreement applicable to the sector’s 190,000 employees (40,000 of whom are currently on short-time work). They agreed on a wage increase of 1.45% from November. This is the same as the inflation rate of the past twelve months. Companies that perform well should pay out a voluntary corona bonus of €150 to their employees.

Government agrees on short-time working scheme
September 24, 2020

The government has agreed on rules for introducing short-time work. Under these new regulations employees will get 70% percent of their net salaries – if they do not exceed the national average wage – for hours not worked. Employers, for their part, will have to pay social security contributions on 70% of gross earnings, and health insurance on the basis of the entire current salary. Both trade unions and employers are against the proposals. The unions demand greater financial input from the state, and employers resist the idea of paying social security contributions for time not worked.

Precarious work rises
September 8, 2020

For several years now different forms of precarious forms of labour which mostly exclude the right to paid sick leave, holiday, lunch and transport allowances, have been on the rise. The COVID-19 pandemic has only made the situation worse and while NGOs, calling for systemic changes, are pessimistic, the Labour Ministry is planning some steps in the autumn.

Social partners agree on extension of temporary layoffs schemes
September 30, 2020

The Government approved the extension of the temporary layoffs programs (ERTE) until January 31, 2021. This came in the wake of the pre-agreement reached with all social partners, unions and employers. The agreement raises the exemptions of the business quotas in the case of ERTEs for COVID-19 resurgence, those that companies can present if their activity is affected by restrictions imposed by the authorities.

More rights for posted workers
September 4, 2020

Employment rights for posted workers to Sweden are to be more comprehensive, and include such things as equivalency of pay (as compared with local workers) and broader applicability of rules around working conditions. This is part of the implementation in Sweden of the European Union revised Directive on the Posting of Workers. Also, employers will have enhanced administrative obligations, e.g., foreign employers must report every posting to the Swedish Work Environment Authority and appoint a contact person in Sweden.

Court confirms Uber status as ‘employer’
September 16, 2020

An earlier ruling (April 2019) which concluded that a former Uber driver wrongly lost his job because he was an employee of the firm and not an independent contractor, was now confirmed by the cantonal appeal court. This latest ruling was hailed by legal experts and trade unions as a ‘landmark decision’. The company can take the case to a higher court, but its position has been weakened by a recent decision in Geneva clarifying the meal delivery service Uber Eats is also an employer.

Women are still under-represented in business top ranks
September 10, 2020

According to the fourth Gender Intelligence Report, half of employees in non-management levels at major companies are women, but promotion rates between men and women remain far from equal. The report analysed data of 302,000 employees across 75 organisations. Only 29% of management positions are taken by women, while they take 49% of non-management roles. Higher up the ladder their representation even drops to 18%. The authors recommend that companies consider gender promotion targets. For example, if women make up 33% of one management band then a third of promotions to the next hierarchical level should be women. Despite this complaint, the report also acknowledges progress in some areas.

New Job Support Scheme to start on 1 November

September 24, 2020

The new Job Support Scheme will start on 1 November and replace the existing Job Retention Scheme which was introduced in March 2020. Under the new scheme, the government will cover 22% of pay for workers facing short-time work in companies where business is slow, for the next six months. The employer will pay 55%, meaning that the worker will receive 77% of their usual monthly wage in total. The support package is designed to help fend off mass unemployment in the wake of the new restrictions imposed to contain the coronavirus.
