• This recession is likely to be more costly in jobs than the previous one and be followed by a long-drawn recovery;

• Differences in resilience, economic specialization and fiscal space among member states risk setting off divergence in living standards among member states;

• Policy responses seem to have deviated from ideas informing economic policies for the last 40 years; will they last? What are the open issues to watch?

Policy responses breaking with long-held ideas guiding economic policy-making in Europe

• Promotion of short-time work/job retention schemes instead of employment or wage flexibility—SURE;
• Large increases in public spending; welcoming bigger rather than promoting smaller State; suspension of application of fiscal rules;
• Agreement on MFF-NGEU: fiscal transfers across member states on the basis of need, to support recovery and just transition;
• Large expansion of asset purchases, including government bonds by the ECB—support for government borrowing.
Is this time going to be different? Key open policy questions

- How will the EU economic governance and especially the fiscal surveillance framework be reformed?
- Will SURE be expanded and extended to become a permanent EU unemployment reinsurance scheme?
- Will the NGEU become a permanent fiscal capacity for the E(M)U?
- How will the ECB reform its monetary policy strategy?
- How will the principles of the European Pillar of Social Rights be implemented to allow for convergence in social standards and resilience?
